GREGORY C. LANGHAM
CLERK

The Honorable Judge Krieger

RE: Case No. 09-CV-00309-MSK-KMT

Request for Order Not to Use E-Mail for Service

Dear Judge Krieger:

I do not believe Shell's attempts to file a suit obligates me to tolerate being put on her mass SPAM email list to COERCE, TROLL and HARASS. (See Exhibit 1)

Shell's emails contain use of "emsvr.com" and "returnreceipt.com" (BOTH in the same email).

I feel that MALWARE-infected emails (see Exhibit 2 and Exhibit 3) are TERRORISTIC.

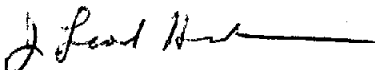

I believe that my only obligation in this matter would be to respond TO THE COURT, and then only after having been properly served summons by Shell.

I want Shell to cease and desist contacting me by any means other than by proper court procedure.

I certainly WILL NOT talk with her on the phone as she REQUIRES, as the last time I did, she was recording me (which recording I did not know was happening) apologizing for "whatever she felt I had done", which was not good enough for her because I didn't know what I was apologizing about. She has published snippets of that conversation at <http://badadvocates.com> and calls me a PIG.

March 23, 2009

Sincerely,

J. Leonard Henderson, Sui Juris

Dear Ms. Baez, Georgia Family Rights, Inc., National Association of Family Advocates, William Wiseman, and Wiseman Studios, and defendants named in Shell v. AFRA , William Tower, Ann Tower, Leonard Henderson, et al.

I refer you to the prior email below:

I am again attempting to resolve this issue before filing the motion.

If you refuse to discuss this matter with me, please advise me of that fact in writing via return email.

For your reference, I intend to have the court rule that the five defendants named above have entered a general appearance by virtue of the letters they sent to the court. You have the option to oppose this motion.

D.C.Colo.L.CivR. 7.1(A) requires me to attempt to resolve this issue with you first. If you do not want me to file this motion, you do have the option to send your signed waiver of personal service to me immediately via email and follow up with the original in the mail. i will not contest the fact that the waiver is out of time.

Along with my duty to try to resolve this issue prior to filing a motion, you also have a duty under this rule to communicate with me and attempt to resolve it, too.

If you don't want me to contact you and you don't wish to communicate about this litigation, you will have to advise me of that fact via return email immediately. Otherwise, I will require you contact me at your earliest convenience to discuss this matter. You may call me at 719-749-2971.

Thank you
Suzanne Shell

In compliance with D.C.Colo.LCivR. 7.1 I am making a good faith attempt to confer with you regarding whether or not you will oppose the following motions I intend to file tomorrow:

Email spyware

It turns out that one of the methods HP investigators used was a service called ReadNotify. It's a tracker that tells someone when an email is open by a designated recipient. Basically, it drops a small amount of html code into an email that reports back when you've opened the email (this is usually referred to as a web bug).

Email spyware? Yes, and remember that if you subscribe to newsletters and the like, chances are that email's delivery is already being tracked through web bugs. And spammers have certainly used this trick to track what email addresses are live. But Readnotify is a little scarier — it's not some nameless tracking of broad open rates on emails — it's someone who is personally tracking the emails they've sent you.

Creepy? Yup.

Using ReadNotify is fairly straightforward (after you signup with their service): You can either download a plug-in, or you can simply append ".readnotify.com" after the end of an email.

The email looks normal, so the only way you can tell if you're being tracked is by looking in the message header.

Or, if you read messages in plain text, you'll see the web bug they put in the email, and can readily see if you're being tracked (and also, if you're in plain text, the tracking won't work). The emails will also ask you for a Return Receipt (which I routinely ignore, despicable things that they are).

However, if you prefer to keep reading email with pretty fonts and graphics (as opposed to plain text, which is always the safest method), you can create a simple Outlook rule to look for Readnotify.

For example, you could create a simple rule in Outlook which puts a colored flag or some time of visual cue whenever someone sends you a Readnotify message. It's not perfect, but it's a start.

Simply create an Outlook rule, select "with specific words in the message header" and then add the following strings:

readnotify.com
emsvr.com

(If you need help creating rules, twclark has a nice explanation of creating x-header rules — at least for spam — here.)

Also, turning off images in your email program should stop the notification to Readnotify as well.

As a side note, Emsvr.com, related to readnotify.com, has one of the creepier websites, using “The great leap forward” to describe their service. Never mind that the term “the great leap forward” is generally associated with Mao Tse Tung’s disastrous attempt to rapidly advance China, leading to the deaths of, oh, about 14–20 million Chinese. The site also inserts “We hope you enjoyed your www.emsvr.com site visit” persistently into your clipboard.” Like I said, creepy.

I’m sure some enterprising fellow will think up a better Outlook rule than me, so feel free to drop a comment if you’ve got a better idea. And keep in mind these rules will only work for Readnotify, and not other email tracking services — and will only work as long as Readnotify puts that domain into the email.

Isn't emsvr.com a bundle of laughs? I read their homepage twice without being able to figure out what they were peddling. So much for the "effective communications" they're waffling about.

I bloody hate these "javascript encoded" pages like these people at emsvr.com are using. What are you afraid of, that people might steal your leeto burrito html code? Jeez. And have you ever heard of accessibility?

Some friends used that ReadNotify thingy years ago. They tested it extensively. Never could get it to work with me... It all depends on the e-mail program you're using. The trick is using an e-mail reader that does not allow a message to interact with the internet except if you specifically allow it to...
