

Randy Blair - Self-professed 'chaplain' for Foundation for Children's Rights. In accordance with Matthew 18:17 - Blair is unto [AFAC] as a heathen man and a publican.

When asked for his denomination, education and ordination credentials, he refused to provide them. AFAC requested them after a confrontation with him during which he demonstrated an unrepentant refusal to conform to scriptural mandates regarding the resolution of problems between brothers/sisters in Christ acted in a shockingly disrespectful manner in an effort to sway public opinion to his side - creating divisiveness and making a very poor public spectacle. As he has proclaimed himself to be a religious leader, we have held him to an accordingly high standard. He failed to live up to that standard. AFAC has observed in the past that certain members of the 'clergy' will use their religious vestments to further themselves personally at the expense of others. We make no comment in this regard to Blair, but leave that up to the reader to determine. The fact that Blair is an ass is not sufficient, in and of itself, for his inclusion on this page. However, Blair has violated standards we adhere to, which does warrant his inclusion on this page.

Recently, it has come to our attention that he is associated with and is/has been reportedly protecting and/or harboring another self-professed advocate who has reportedly turned in multiple parents to CPS. (Since this person has not yet been personally contacted by AFAC, we will refrain from publishing any further details on this at this time.) He is untrained as an advocate, and fails to maintain a professional posture by disrupting our important business with personal attacks against other advocates publicly. He appears to have no concept of professional ethics or practices and inappropriately places his advocacy related interactions at a personal level. He has demonstrated an inability to set aside personalities or personal differences to work effectively with others based on their merits and abilities, regardless of his personal feelings about them. This results in his competing with others in this movement instead of being part of the team effort or supporting the work of others in this movement, undermining the efforts and integrity of the entire movement. more

We were rather shocked when he demanded an unreasonably high "free-will donation" ($50) to cover the cost of duplicating a brief tape of a radio show that he appeared on as a guest, a show which he doesn't even own the rights to (we would have been happy not only give full credit in our broadcast programming but to provide money for the tape and postage and a little extra, but $50!!!!??). Is this a pattern of demanding money for his advocacy or a very public personal dig at the person who requested it? Either way, it is inconsistent with best advocacy practices. It looks to us like a carbon copy of the worst practices of money-grubbing televangelists. He has given the title 'chaplain' a bad rap, so bad that other, highly ethical religious leaders in this movement shun that title for themselves because of his highly publicized mis-'use' of it.

Like the Dutkwiecz's, he has demonstrated an inability to exercise appropriate professional discretion or to be trustworthy. He even appeared to turn on his own associate. Blair took a private communication between himself and AFAC which included information (information that he was already privy to) about another advocate and published it on a public list. This information was not his to release to the public, and should not have been released publicly before the other advocate had been contacted by AFAC and had been given the opportunity to respond to the accusations. (If this is how he shabbily treats his compatriots, we understand better, why he treats those he doesn't like so poorly.) We believe the only reason he could have for disrespecting the privacy of others would be to serve his own personal agenda at the expense of others in this movement. We believe Mr. Blair cannot be trusted to act ethically, preferring to save his own hide, no matter who else or what else is harmed in the process, including the efficacy and effectiveness of this movement.

He has also disparaged those seeking or needing his help, demonstrating an appalling lack of compassion and understanding. In our opinion, Blair is unqualified by temperament, skills or character to be in any leadership position, and most particularly, appallingly unqualified to be in a position to be representing the Christian religion with any authority. If he were an AFAC employee or contractor, he would be fired immediately. Furthermore, even if he were to seek training, we will not train him for any advocacy work in this movement.
